The IEICE Transactions on Information and Systems announces that it will publish a special section entitled "Special Section on Intelligent Information Processing Technology to be Integrated into Society" in July 2025.

With the widespread use of sensors and mobile devices, as well as advances in artificial intelligence and knowledge processing technologies, it has become possible to discover and utilize human knowledge and wisdom from the information and big data collected from these devices. In such an environment, there are strong needs to develop innovative systems and methodologies that can clarify social issues in daily life, social systems, and education, and lead to creative and collaborative solutions. For this purpose, advanced collaboration and fusion of various sciences such as information science, language science, and knowledge science are indispensable, and at the same time, how to design and construct appropriate models and innovative systems for society, and how to apply them practically with high speed and high precision are required.

In the field of knowledge information and communication, which is premised on the integration of such scientific and technological fields, new domains and technologies such as knowledge science, service science, robotics, artificial intelligence, haptic technology, sensor networks, and virtual reality are continuously being created, and their further integrations and fusions are accelerating. In addition, the amount of available data is increasing dramatically, and the quality of data is changing drastically; thus, there are needs to innovate conventional technologies. Therefore, we are planning a special issue, will be published on July, 2025, on theoretical and technological approaches to solve large-scale and complex problems by integrating multiple disciplines and technologies to further enhance human cooperation and harmony and creativity.
