Information network technology is predicted to become a key industry. In this information communication system, electronic displays are important devices as human interface. These displays are composed of various materials and components, based on a variety of operating principles and application fields. This special section will focus on the recent progress in the electronic display technologies.

1. Scope

The major topics of interest include, but not limited to:

- Various electronic displays including flexible displays, electronic papers, three dimensional displays, inorganic/ organic electroluminescent displays, field emission displays, plasma displays, projectors and liquid crystal displays
- Displays for portable systems, TV systems, digital signage systems and hyper realistic systems
- Display science and technologies
- Materials and components for electronic displays including input devices such as touch panels
- Display fabrication methods, display panel production/manufacturing equipments, measurement instruments and test equipments
- Driving circuits and image processing for display systems
- Evaluation techniques, human factors and application systems for electronic displays

2. Submission Instructions

The deadline for submission is February 28, 2026. Types of manuscripts for this Special Section are only "Full Paper" and "Brief Paper".
